If we dont have it, we can with just the touch of a button. If we need to learn how to do it, we can actually get around it with something as simple as a kit that we bought at the local convenience store. If we think we want it, all we need to do to have it is get online. These days, the art of doing something for yourself, or the art of using skill is one that is dying. Unless you want to go to school or some sort of special kind of class, you are out of luck when you need something useful. Then, when you actually do need to know how to do something, you are stuck. Something as apparently simple as tying a knot can feel like an impossibility when you have to do it under pressure you cant. Things just seem to stop and you are left feeling defeated. The only solution is to learn how to do things for yourself, and to do them well. You have to know how to handle the simple things, and turn minor skills into useful aspects you can fall back on when times get tough. You never know when you are going to need to know basic things such as tying knots. You never realize the basic things you need knots for. One knot isnt going to fix everything, and the more you know how to tie, the better off you are going to be in the long run.
